

I feel that the role of an elected government is to act in the best interests of the majority of its voters. Consolidation of media ownership limits, precipitously, both public participation and choice by homogenizing markets that may have once had local input or programming. The FCC, as a Federal regulatory body, is clearly contradicting its mission in acting in the corporate interest and not the public interest.

We need less media consolidation, not more. Please act in the public interest and sanction variety, not homogenization, in our precious and distinct American media.
